HERE IS GOOD NEWS FOR STOMACH VICTIMS

Some very remarkable results are being obtained by treating stomach, liver and intestinal troubles with pure vegetable oils, which exert a cleansing, soothing and purifying action upon the lower bowels, removing the obstructions of poisonous fecal matter and gases and preventing their absorption by the blood. This done, the food is allowed free passage from the stomach, fermentation ceases and stomach troubles quickly disappear.

George H. Mayr, for twenty years a leading Chicago druggist, cured himself and many of his friends of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles of years' standing by this treatment, and so successful was the remedy he devised that it has since been placed in the hands of druggists all over the country, who have sold thousands of bottles.

Though absolutely harmless, the effect of the medicine is sufficient to convince any one of its remarkable effectiveness, and within 24 hours the sufferer feels like a new person.

A NEW FROCK AND HOW TO MAKE IT --- By MAY MANTON

FALL is always a time of great interest in the matter of school frocks. This year the most novel is found in the one-piece dresses, as they are called, or those that are made with skirts and blouses that are joined in one way or another to make complete the collar on the bias fold and the line of large perforations in the cuffs on the bias in place of on the straight; but in these days a great many materials are woven or knitted to give the effect of bias plaid, while they are in reality straight and of course such material greatly simplifies the labor. The process of making will always be the same. Again, the dress can be made of one material throughout and if a serge or gabardine were to be used, it would be well to treat it in that way, although there are always possibilities and advantages in combinations. They give good color effects and they serve the very practical end of helping materially when remaining is under consideration.

One of the diagrams shows the dress laid out on material 44 inches wide, skirt and blouse all together. If you have decided to make it as shown in the picture, or two materials, it will be necessary only to lay the skirt, collar and cuffs on the plaid and the parts of the blouse on the plain, but to follow the same general plan for the one diagram serves perfectly for both necks. The second diagram shows all the pieces numbered as they are to be put together, that is to say, when you are making the dress, you will remember that one goes to one neck, the ends meet at the front for the round neck, they are joined a little, otherwise there is no difference.

Before laying the pattern on the material, measure it on the child for whom it is designed to ascertain if the skirt is the correct length. Children vary greatly in height and this is always important. When you have ascertained the correct length, you will know whether the skirt is long enough to allow for a hem or is not. If it is not, you can either allow a little for a hem at the lower edge, or can cut the length of the pattern and underface. If it is longer than the child requires you can measure the exact width and turn just that width up for the hem. Lay the pattern out on the material, pin carefully into place, taking care that in each case the straight line of the goods is followed faithfully as directed on the envelope and as shown on the diagram. Trace all around the outside edge of the pattern to obtain the sewing line. Mark all the perforations and notches, then cut as far beyond the outline of the pattern as is necessary for a good seam for your material. For the linen, three-eighths of an inch will be quite sufficient, but for serge, which needs a little more readily, a half or even five-eighths of an inch might be a safe touch and it will also be necessary to determine the width of the seam by the material. After cutting carry the various markings through to the under side with the tailor's tacks that have been described so often. If they seem a little difficult, pin the two thicknesses of the material together over each marking, turn over to the under side and mark with chalk or a lacing one and one-half inches in width and as long as each arm-hole edge. Stitch one long edge of this facing to the seam of each sleeve, then turn the facing up on the under side, turn the outer edge under one-quarter of an inch and stitch as in the picture to make a finish. Join the under-arm and sleeve edges, first on the right side and then on the wrong side as directed for the shoulders. Cut the lining for the cuffs exactly the same as for the outside and make this lining of the material for the blouse or of lining material as you prefer. Join the ends of the cuffs and of the lining separately. Baste the two together, right sides meeting, stitch all along the upper edge of the marked outline of the pattern, turn neatly and carefully, they baste the two thicknesses together and stitch three-quarters of an inch within each edge. Arrange over the sleeves, with the seams and the notches exactly meeting. Then cut two bias underfacings one and one-quarter inches wide and the length of the sleeves at the wrist. Join the ends and arrange over the cuffs with the right sides together. Stitch the facing to the cuffs and the sleeves on the marked outline of the pattern, then turn the facings and the seams up on the under side and stitch or hem the edge into place.

For the front edges, cut straight underfacings of the material one and three-quarter inches wide. Lay over the right sides of the blouse and stitch the edges together, always following the marked outline of the pattern; join neatly, baste into place and stitch one-quarter and one-quarter inches of Celere, the child take care not to help a well the Italian to the lower joining in native costume; you want the patronage of these people as in the of Mr. and Mrs. John Hays, he mired the collar, I stitch directed

BOYS SUITS THAT ARE POPULAR

WITHOUT doubt, the first, all-important requirement of the boy's costume is that it shall be masculine in effect. For the older boys, the somewhat severe tailored effect prevails, but this season there is a license allowed in the costumes of the younger boys that is exceptional and exceedingly interesting.

garments. The one shown in the illustration is among the best. It also is very simple and easy to make, consequently it seems an especially good design to discuss at this season. As it is shown here, the blouse is of white linen and the skirt and the trimming are of plaid cotton sponge and those materials are admirable for present needs, but as a matter of course the effect could be copied in either wool or cotton materials that might suit the special need. The cotton sponge is woven to give a bias effect. If you can not obtain your material woven in this way and still want a bias plaid, it would be necessary to fold the material for the skirt on the bias and to lay the edge of the pattern on the bias in place of the lengthwise fold and to lay the edge of and two goes to two, so if there is any doubt in your mind as to which edges are to be joined, it will be necessary only to glance at the diagram to make sure. There is only one collar given, but it can be attached either to the high or to the round neck. For the high neck, it must be cut off a little on the perforations near the front edge, but the two collars have exactly the same shape and the sewing on is done in exactly the same way. For the high being thread as you may like. As a first step, in the making, join the shoulder edges of the blouse, taking up first a very narrow seam on the right side and then turning again on the wrong side and stitching on the marked outline of the pattern. Join the sleeves to the arm-hole edges and to do this, baste them together with the notches exactly meeting and the single perforations in the sleeves at the shoulder seams. Cut a bias under-
